

Excited? Who's Excited? We're All Excited Over Mama

Mother's Day is a serene—a happy day. So Dad, if you decide to let mama sleep, and you do the cooking, the important thing to remember is not to get excited. Try . . . really try to stay cool. Plan each maneuver well in advance so you give the appearance of knowing what you are doing. You might even consider wearing tennis shoes with non-skid soles so you can move fast without slipping. And pause occasionally to collect your wits. If the fire starts to devour the meat, don't shout at junior to get the garden hose. Speak to him gently. Then put down the knife you've been using to chop vegetables and walk calmly into the house for a shaker of water. Don't take time or the meat will be completely ruined, the knife with you back into the yard, glistening water and the knife . . . and anything would say upon seeing you running back yard carrying a knife. Finally, voice. Nothing, but nothing gives you order. Really, now, come to think of it, you're the cooking to mama and start thinking really nice Mother's Day gift. Anybody
